

Most see a house nobody wants.

I see unpredictable hours.

The buyers are often there. What's missing is someone to make it sellable.

Why brokers walk away

An undivided inheritance split across generations, a missing licence, a boundary nobody registered: on a sales commission, that open-ended work eats the margin.

It isn't the house. It's the hours.

Why success fee alone didn't hold

Our first instinct was a full team of lawyers, architects and mediators on success fee, nothing upfront. Once several professionals are involved, that's almost a dream.

Give away the diagnosis, charge for the execution

Each step earns the next: the owner shares the story before anyone asks for documents or money.

The first step costs the owner nothing

AI reads the documents and the story, a person reviews it, and the owner gets a clear roadmap. The work that follows is paid.

In Portugal we create relationships before we do business.

Hear the owner's story first. Money only comes with a roadmap and a fit.

Together, we can bring these buildings back into use.
