Is your stuck property as unique as it feels?

Most of them fit a handful of types, each with its own way through.

02

Empty is a symptom, not a diagnosis

Behind it sit heirs who can't agree, owners without money to renovate, old rents that never covered upkeep, distrust of rental rules, plain sentiment.

> Every owner feels their case is unique.

03

Not all complexity is the same

Fragmented ownership is binary: either everyone signs, or there is no deal. Occupation is mostly a cost in time, and with patient capital, time can be priced.

Most stuck properties fit one of a few types

01 LOCKED

Inheritance deadlock

heirs who can't agree

02

Financial distress

no money to renovate

03

Unreachable co-owner

out of reach

04

Missing papers

the file is incomplete

05

Occupants

mostly a cost in time

06

Unfinished structure

started, then left

Name the type, and the case gets its template: a checklist, then the right specialists.

05

Rank by quality, not by risk

The small, clean parcels needed the same professional work as the big ones, for far less upside. The complicated prime block was where the value was.

> The investors pushed back, and they were right.

Name the type before you look for a buyer: it tells you the team, the timeline and the offer.

Take the list, use it, and tell me which type I missed.
